As part of the sustainable development of our company, taking account of environmental and social impacts has become in many sectors a key element in the strategy of companies. At the heart of operations management, supply chain management and project management are involved primarily in the development of value creation models and respectful of CSR principles. These emerging models need to be consolidated, others are in development. Which decision support systems? What impacts on stakeholders? Which theoretical models? So many questions that spur on today's scientific community.
